Poland Quadruples Price of Bread On First Anniversary of Solidarity

WARSAW - Poland quadrupled the basic price of bread on Monday and sharply increased the cost of floor and cereals. The increases came on the first anniversary of the agreements that resulted in the creation of Communist Eastern Europe's-first inde-

President and Premier Die in Iran Of Bomb Injuries; Council Governs

BEIRUT - An estimated 1 million mourners, some chanting "Death to America," jammed the streets of Tehran on Monday for the funeral of Iran's president and premier, dead of injuries from a bombing Sunday afternoon, reports from Iran said. The bomb attack that killed President Mohammed Ali Rajai and Premier Mohammed Javad Bahonar was the second against the clergy-led government in two months. Mr. Rajai had been presi-dent for 27 days and Mr. Bahonar premier for 25. Mourners also demanded the death of former President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr as the funeral procession wound through the streets of the capital, carrying the bodies of Mr. Rajai and Mr. Bahonar from the Majlis (parliament), where they had lain in state, to the Behesht Zahra Cemetery on the outskirts of the city, the official Pars news agency said.

As a crowd, estimated by a Majlis spokesman at 1 million, stood outside the parliament buildstood outside the parliament building, a Majlis deputy from the Tehran district blamed the explosion on Mr. Bani-Sadr and his leftist supporters in the underground Mujahaddin Khalq, Iran's largest opposition group. Mr. Bani-Sadr and the Mujahaddin leader, Massoud Rajavi, are in exile in France.

The nation's revolutionary leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, called Mr. Rajai and Mr. Bahonar martyrs and said their deaths would not alter the course of the Islamic revolution in Iran.

France Moves to Ease Strain in Its Ties to Arabs

By Joseph Fitchett nonal Herald Tribune

PARIS - The hastily arranged meeting in Beirut between the French minister of external relations, Claude Cheysson, and the PLO chairman, Yasser Arafat, checked a process of recent deterioration in France's political and economic relations with important Arab countries.

France, like all European governments, faces mounting problems in its efforts to find an effec-tive approach to the Middle East. In the face of apparently insur-mountable, Israeli-Palestinian differences, the European initiative has foundered — and the appeal of extremism is growing in the region.

Saudi AWACS to Lack Some Key Technology

New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The five radar surveillance and battle-control aircraft that the Reagan administration proposes to sell to Saudi Arabia will not have the same key technological systems that advanced U.S. Air Force models will have, according to a Defense Department document.

The systems to be omitted are designed to resist enemy jamming of radar and communications and to help manage a large-scale aerial battle.

However, according to the docu-ment, the Saudis' Airborne Warning and Control System (AWACS) planes would be identical to the basic U.S. Air Force version to which more sophisticated equipment is added.

The question of how the Saudi AWACS will be equipped is likely to be important during hearings and debate in Congress, which can veto the sale in votes expected to come in October. The Defense Department docu-ment was part of the formal notifi-cation of the proposed sale that was sent to Congress last week. Of-ficials said the Saudi version of the aircraft would be a highly capable early-warning surveillance and hattle-control plane, particularly in the military environment around the Gulf oil fields in eastern Saudi Arabia. Congressional critics of the proposed sale have expressed fears that the AWACS planes would threaten Israel and that the advanced U.S. military technology on board could fall into the hands of the Soviet Union because of instability in the Middle East.

U.S. officials said that certain equipment would not be placed on the Saudi version of the Boeing E-3A AWACS. Military planners are increasingly concerned that a fu-ture air war would be, in large part, "a jamming war," in which each side would attempt electronically to neutralize the other side's technological abilities.

Jamming is interfering with a radio or radar signal by sending out electromagnetic energy on the same frequency. Various electronic deception measures can also interfere with the mission of a plane such as the AWACS.

The "most important thing the top one" in advanced systems that would not be sold to Saudi Arabia, a Pentagon official said, is a Joint Tactical Information Distribution

It is described as a sophisticated. jam-resistant, encrypted communi-cation system that gives an AWACS plane enhanced ability to communicate, in digital and voice form, to a very large number of friendly fighter planes, informauon about the radar data it is picking up.

11 is expected to be especially of the useful in large air hattles of the kind that might be fought in Cen-tral Europe in the event of a major East-West war.

Radio System The Saudi AWACS would also lack an advanced jam-resistant, en-crypted voice-radio system known as Have Quick, U.S. electronics corporations, however, would be permitted to develop and to sell to the Saudis a system that, although open to jamming, would be secure from heing deciphered hy enemy forces. In addition, the Saudi planes would not be equipped with an electronic counter-countermeasure system, still under development, that is intended to find enemy forces even when they are carrying our electronic deception measures. "We would not furnish that in any circumstances," a Pentagon offi-cial said of the Saudi sale.

Future U.S. AWACS planes will have 12 radar-computer display consoles instead of the nine that are now standard. The three extra consoles, which are meant to assist in large-scale battle management, are not thought necessary for the

For Reagan administration officials, who often evoke alleged So-viet support for international terrorism, the sanction against the Soviet-backed Afghan regime apparently has strong ideological overtones. During the Pakistani hijacking, U.S. officials repeatedly drew attention to the presence at Kabul airport of Soviet military officers who failed to intervene.

The United States has already severed air links with Afghanistan, and now it has persuaded most U.S. allies to support the anti-terroust sanction.

Bomb Blasts Ramstein Air Base; U.S. General, 19 Others Are Hurt

RAMSTEIN AIR BASE, West Germany — An explosion rocked the headquarters of the U.S. and NATO air commands on Monday, wounding 18 Americans, including an Air Force general, and two West Germans, officials reported.

West German authorities said it appeared to be the work of terror-ists who planted a bomb beneath an automobile. The blast came ngains a background of mounting anti-American sentiment among some West Germans hecause of U.S. military policies.

The Air Force said the injured included Brig. Gen. Joseph D. Moore, assistant deputy chief of staff for operations. He and another senior officer, Lt. Col. Douglas R. Young, were reported in stable condition at the U.S. Army bospital in nearby Landstuhl.

Several others among the in-jured were taken to the hospital but were treated and released. All but one of the Americans injured were officers.

Windows Shattered

The explosion occurred shortly after 7 a.m. and apparently came from an automobile parked in front of the adjacent headquarters buildings of the U.S. Air Force Europe and of the NATO air command, West German police said. Wimesses said the bomb, which went off as the first stream of civilian and military personnel were re-porting for work, shattered car windshields and hlew out windows anti-military and anti-American sentiment in West Germany, fueled in part by opposition to and interior walls in nearby buildings.

"Thank the Lord the explosion occurred before most people reported for work or we would have had a lot more injuries." an Air Force spokesman commented. He said damage was extensive.

A spokesman at the Federal Criminal Office in nearby Karlsruhe said that West German authorities believe the explosion was the work of terrorists, but be gave no further details. No group claimed responsibility. Cause Undetermined

"The cause of the explosion bas not been determined," a brief Air Force statement said. Security guards sealed off the post to all but "essential" duty personnel, spokesmen said, although they insisted operations at the base had not been impaired. U.S. officials denied radio reports that a second bomb was found near the base. Monday's blast was the second the bombings.

On Sunday, a small pipe bomb exploded in a trash bin near the Supreme Court building in Karlsri he but caused no damage.

Attack on Synagogue Is Attributed to Arab 'Terrorist Network'

However, a U.S. official explained that the commercial versions of equipment sold to the Saudis would be made identical in "fit, form and function" to U.S. equipment, so that "we can snap out their black boxes and insert our black boxes, if necessary."

'Look-Down' Radar

Sometime after the fall of 1985. the five Saudi AWACS would re-place four U.S. AWACS planes now based in Saudi Arabia. The AWACS is basically a modified Boeing 707 with a large rotodome mounted above the fuselage. The equipment, which makes six revolutions a minute, contains radar antennas and the Identifica-don, Friend or Foe antenna. One of the most important abilities of the AWACS is its unusually capable "look-down" radar. Ordinary radars find it difficult to separate useful targets on or near the ground from a so-called "back-ground clutter" of confusing and overlapping signals. The AWACS can pick up low-flying objects at considerable range, although this ability varies with the size of the

On station over eastern Saudi Arabia, the planes are believed to be able to extend the warning time against a lowlevel attack from about two minutes to about seven minutes. The extra time is believed sufficient to permit Sandi fighter planes to attack incoming aircraft before they release any bombs, something that would not be possi-ble in the flat terrain of the Gulf if only ground radar stations were in

France Moving to Ease Strain in Arab Ties

set of reservations about France. Mr. Mitterrand's decision to overturn the previous govern-ment's compliance with the Arab boycott against Israel drew irritat-

According to Western diplomats who deal with the Gulf, conservative Arab leaders also are uncomfortable with Mr. Mitterrand's decision to appoint Communist ministers. They dislike the presence of several strongly pro-Israeli advis-ers in his immediate entourage. They worry about the Socialist government's intention to nationalize key industries and to apply stricter moral standards to arms sales — developments likely to cramp commissions. In effect, they see Mr. Mitterrand tilting toward Israel. Israel's irritated reaction to the Cheysson-Arafat meeting, as analyzed by several diplomats in Paris, was a reflection of disappointed Israeli expectations. The government argues that Greece's current economie ills are common to other West European countries.

October Vote

Socialist opposition leader Andreas Papandreou, who is making the economy the focal point of his campaign, maintains that the policies of the ruling New Democracy Party have led the country to "chaos and bankruptcy." He proposes "socialization" of the nation's key industries, a loose term that seems to include conventional nationalization, the formation of agricultural cooperatives, a reform of bank credit policy and import con-

The last word rests with the Greek voters on Oct. 1g, who will have an eye on their pocketbooks. In terms of the last decade the Greeks have never had it so bad. In the 1970s, Greece enjoyed annual growth rates of more than 5 percent. Economic policies de-signed to raise spending and increase the money supply provided citizens with more money and increased imported luxury goods to

But the elouds began to gather in the late 1970s, as inflationary pressures increased and productivity and investments lagged. A move to tighten monetary and in-comes policies succeeded in curbing growth, but not inflation.

Despite price controls, the annual inflation rate surged from 13 percent in 1978 to 25 percent in 1980, well above the West Europe-

The balance of payments problem should be eased somewhat by the production of the Prinos oilfield offshore from Kavalla in the city's western sector and the Chris-northern Aegean, which began production in June. It is expected to yield 25,000 barrels a day, covering about 13 percent of the country's annual oil needs. The factor most damaging to

Greece's balance of payments is the devaluation of about 37 percent of the drachma against the U.S. dollar since May, 1980, when the Greek currency was subjected to a controlled float in preparation for joining the EEC. The depreciation is expected to increase the cost of Greek imports by 30 to 35

Joining the EEC is unlikely to provide much immediate economic relief. It has meant sharp rises in food costs for consumers. Farmers, on the other hand, are dissatisfied with price increases imposed by the EEC in Brussels that fall far short of the annual inflation rate.

Despite insistence by the minister of economic coordination, Ioannis Paleokrassas, that the economy could be expected to pick up over the summer, observers agree that the prospects for a strong recovery before the election The government has enforced a 20-percent limit on wage increases, equal to the official projected inflation rate for this year. But it pushed through 80-percent increases in electricity rates in January in an effort to counter high oil prices. The government has beld down telephone and transport costs to the public at considerable expense to the state.

Ovambo Support In fact, the ability of the insurgents to continue the struggle—given the overwhelming superiority of the South African forces—is routinely acknowledged by South African officers to be a function of the support they enjoy among the Ovambos, the largest population group in Namibia, who are concentrated near the border and therefore sustain almost all the civilian casualties of the war. South Africa's white leaders routinely argue that the coming to power of SWAPO in Namibia would automatically represent an expansion of Soviet influence in the region. Earlier this year Mr.

Crocker himself was publicly snubbed by Prime Minister Pieter W. Botha for saying this was not necessarily so. But what if the Soviet Union and Cuba were now to react to South Africa's latest operations in southern Angola by sending in more advisers, troops and equip-ment? And what if these ultimately came into contact with South Afri can forces?

Mr. Crocker spoke Saturday of "our proper role in fostering the region's security and countering the expansion of Soviet influence." But he did not suggest how the

In defining southern Africa's and the United States would finally be forced to take sides. economic importance to the Unit-ed States, Mr. Crocker stressed its output of key minerals and its in-dustrial production. He did not In such a situation, so this theory goes, it is inconceivable that the Reagan administration would line up against South Africa. Mr. Crocker's formulation of the new U.S. stand shows that he sees this pitfall. His method of avoiding it is to promote a Namibian settlement as a matter of urgency by doctoring the Western proposal. But his apparent assumption that South Africa is ready for the only kind of settlement the black countries in the region will accept — one in which the insurgent movement has a chance to come to power — has looked increasingly dubious, espe-cially since an election in South Africa last April in which signifi-

The same can be said about Mr. Crocker's assumption that a "process" of dismanling the legal structure of apartheid is under way on the domestic scene. Carter Reflects on Foreign Policy

Discusses Shah, Brezhnev and Sadat

By Don Oberdorfer

Washington Post Service SHANGHAI - Former President Jimmy Carter says he did the right thing to hold his tongue about the policies of his successor in the early months of the new administration, allowing President Reagan to swing around to views "reasonably compatible" with his own on several major foreign poli-

Citing the Middle East peace process, proliferation of nuclear apons and the China-Taiwan issue as examples of Reagan admin-istration policy shifts, Mr. Carter said, "I think they would have found it much more difficult to evolve their present policies...had I spoken out in a combative way or a critical way" about the initial

Mr. Carter, who has had no con-tact with President Reagan since turning over the presidency on Jan. 20, attributed modifications in his successor's policies in part to "experience in the Oval Office" that required changes from campaign rhetoric.

Plenty of Time

Another reason he has said so little in public, according to Mr. Carter, is his belief that other Democrats such as Walter F. Mondale and Sens. Edward M. Kennedy and John Glenn need their day in the sun. "There's plenty of time for me in the future to voice my own views if I see fit," Mr. Carter

Asked if he is thinking of running for president again, Mr. Carter replied: "No. I don't have any ambitions to run for public office."

On Saturday night, Mr. Carter, who is on his first overseas trip since leaving the presidency, looked back on his administration of foreign affairs and ahead to the future in an interview in the city of Xian, Shaanxi province. Late Sunday, Mr. Carter and his party left for Shanghai,

The former president discussed the crisis in Iran, especially his de-cision to admit the shah to the United States, at some length for the first time since the freeing of the U.S. hostages on inauguration Day. And he spoke anew of his surprise at the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, which he called a "radical departure" from previous Soviet policy and a surprise to all

LIMA — Seven explosions, including blasts at the U.S. Embassy and the residence of U.S. Ambas-sador Edwin G. Corr. caused heavy damage and killed two persons Monday, police reported.

The early morning explosions at the U.S. diplomatic installations coincided with bombines at the Ford Motor Co., the Bank of America the local distributors of Coca-Cola and the G. Berckemeyer and Co. milk products administrative offices, which repre-sent Carnation Milk in Peru.

The seventh blast was at a private home, where a fire killed two persons and injured seven others, police said. There was no further information immediately available on the fatalities or the home where they occurred. No injuries were reported in the other explosions.

Doctors Order Begin To Take a Brief Rest

JERUSALEM -- Prime Minister Menachem Begin, 68, was ordered by his doctors Monday to rest at home for a few days after complaining of pains in his left knee, a government official said.

The prime minister is due to meet President Reagan in Washngton next week. The official said that doctors said Mr. Begin's knee aches would not cause any change in his travel plans. "It is just some knee pains and nothing more," he confrontations with strongly feli opposing opinions." After easily reaching agreements with Mr. Sadat, "I would spend days or weeks or months negotiating with Begin, often with his own advisors being more amenable to an agreement than was he," Mr. Carter said.

An Extremely Courageous' Begin At the same time, Mr. Carter

called Mr. Begin an "extremely courageous man who made decisions for the well-being of Mideast peace that sometimes were in con-travention of his longstanding political alignments." And Mr. Carter added, "I don't know of arry other Israeli leader who would have been willing to move so strongly on the return of the Sinai region to Egypt."

The former president, who said he has considered writing a book on the Middle East but was convinced by his publishers to write general memoirs instead, is deeply convinced that the contending par-ties must grapple with the Palestin-ian problem. There is no way to have permanent peace in the Mid-dle East without resolving the Palestinian issue," he said, repeating for emphasis, "No way."

President Leonid I. Brezhnev of the Soviet Union, whom Mr. Carter met at Vienna for the signing of the SALT-2 treaty in mid-1979, was a surprise to Mr. Carter: He was much more vigorous than had been reported to me by other foreign leaders with whom he had met." Mr. Brezhnev was "obviously in charge" of his delegation, seeming to make the final decision on contentious points, and "he had a sense of humor," Mr. Carter re-

Disapproval of Reagan

Though it is politically popular to condemn everything about the Soviets these days, I was convinced then and I still am convinced that Brezhiev desires peace," Mr. Carter said. "I could see in his remarks and his attitude a deep memory of the 24 million Russians who were killed during World War II and a deep desire to avoid another world conflict."

The former president expressed disapproval of two elements of Reagan administration policy toward the Soviet Union; The "enormous" escalation of military spending, well beyond what Mr. Carter said he felt is needed, and failure to pursue strategic arms control "without hesitation" despite the cross purposes of the two superpowers in many areas.

"I felt that the Soviets negotiated in good faith and constructively on the SALT-2 treaty. I believe it's to the advantage of our country to observe its terms, and I don't beheve it would be possible to nego-tiate a better treaty under existing circumstances," Mr. Carter said.

Asked where the Soviet-U.S. relationship went awry, the former president singled out "two serious mistakes which in my judgment terminated the peaceful progress that was exemplified by the SALT-2 treaty signing." These were the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in December, 1979, and the "sponsoring" of the Vietnamese invasion of Cambodia. "This is the root of the problem between me an zhnev and our two countries," he

Mr. Carter added that he had come to believe since then that "had the Soviets not gone into Afghanistan and been condemned on a worldwide basis, they would have invaded Poland." He declined to give his reasons for this as-

Iran Recalled

It was the painful subject of Iran, which consumed much of Mr. Carter's time and political capital in the year before his elec-tion loss last November, which drew the greatest amount of de-tailed recollection from the former president.

Mr. Carter said he had no doubt that the Iranian revolution, "causing the doubling of oil prices, enormous and uncontrollable inflation and the seizure of the hostages" was a major factor in his failure to

In their first meeting in 1977, Mr. Carter recalled, be counseled the shah in a general Cabinet room session and then in private in his inner office to "broaden his contacts among the Iranian people. The shah "didn't agree that this change was necessary," Mr. Carter and

'Shah Would Prevail'

The former president rejected charges that his human rights emphasis contributed to the monarch's downfall, saying, "I don't believe that the pointing out of the monarch of the saying that the pointing out of the saying of the need to honor the rights of his people caused his downfall. If there was a cause, it was because he failed to honor the demands of his own people."

former president said. "If there were those who did, they didn't reveal their foresight to me. That includes the press, private senior statesmen, the intelligence commumity and the State Department. There was a general presumption that the shah was threatened but that he would prevail."

When the shah did fall, Mr. Carter said, "there was no hesitation on my part in offering him a haven." The former president said he had helped arrange a place for the fallen shah at the Annenberg estate in California, and personally gave permission for the shah's air-plane to be refueled at an Air Force base en route to California. "At the last minute, a surprise to us, be decided to stay in Egypt" where he had flown from Tehran, Mr. Carter said. "Later, we still of-fered him a place to stay, but he said he wanted to go to Morocco." Mr. Carter said that "after the Iranian revolution was implanted," he decided it would be a mistake for the shah to come to the United States, which would "rearouse the fervent pitch of animosity in Iran against American citizens." So when the shah asked to

Morocco, "my own preference was that he go somewhere else." 15 Countries Contacted

"We contacted about 15 countries, trying to find a suitable place for the shah to reside," Mr. Carter said. The shah preferred some countries that would not accept him, such as Belgium and Switzer-land, according to Mr. Carter, and rejected some that expressed will-inguess to take him in, including South Africa and Paraguay.

After a temporary stay in the Bahamas, the shah went to Pana-ma, which accepted him "perhaps out of gratitude toward me" arising from the Panama Canal treaties and "against their better judgment," Mr. Carter said. When Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance said that the shah "needed to come to our country for medical treatment, that his life was in danger...there was no hesitation on my part," Mr. Carter recalled.

"I don't recall any tortured decision process."

Once the American hostages were seized, growing out of Iranian protests about the presence of the shah in the United States, Mr. Carter faced a series of difficult

Washington Past Service

WASHINGTON - The chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers has given the clearest indication to date that the Reagan administration will have to trim the military budget to keep the 1982 federal deficit from grow-Murray L. Weidenbaum, speaking on a U.S. television interview program, said military spending authority had grown 55 percent between fiscal 1980 and fiscal 1982 (beginning Oct. 1). Calling that growth "extremely generous," Mr. Weidenhaum suggested a less rapid expansion might be in order.

Meanwhile, Paul A. Volcker, the Federal Reserve Board chairman, said there is "no question" that the nation's monetary authorities plans to maintain tight controls on money and credit availability. These restrictions have kept interest rates at near-record levels for months. The high cost of borrowing is a major reason for increas-ingly pessimistic forecasts for the 1982 federal deficit.

Mr. Volcker, speaking on another television program, said the Fed's ught-money policies have reduced money supply growth and resulted in lower inflation this year. "We're a long way from home, but there are hopeful signs," Mr. Volcker said.

Uncomfortable Policy

He agreed that using monetary policy alone to fight inflation is uncomfortable. He said the administration needs to find more hudget cuts to take some pressure off monetary policy in the fight to reduce inflation.

-We still have a $700-billion budget. There's a lot of room for cutting, I find it bard to believe there is no room for economies in the defense program," Mr. Volcker

Mr. Weidenbaum admitted he did not have a specific plan to cut military spending, but said nothing was sacrosanct in the budget. Military spending should be "subject to the same tough" standards as any other federal budget item, be

Effect of Tax Cut

Although Mr. Weidenhaum stopped short of guaranteeing a cut in the Pentagon budget, it was the stongest statement to date by an administration official that cuts to bold down the budget deficit will have to come in military as well as civilian and social pro-

In private, however, officials have conceded that the $150-billion tax cut passed last month will result in deficits higher than the administration wants. If President Reagan is to keep his fiscal 1982 deficit to the $42.5 billion he promised, they said, Pentagon spending will have to be trimmed. The Congressional Budget Office projects a $60 billion deficit under current conditions. Fears of a sharply higher deficit have sent stock and bond prices plunging in recent weeks.

Mr. Weidenbaum, however, said positive effects of the Reagan policy already are evident. While the New York markets may be plunging, he said, the world is giving the United States a vote of confidence. The dollar has been climbing in value in the past six months.

"Sound as a dollar' is an accurate statement once again," Mr. Weidenbaum said. Mr. Weidenbaum's predecessor in the Carter administration. Charles L. Schultze, said the economy would be better off if the Reagan administration trimmed what he called a massive defense budget to enable the Federal Reserve to run a somewhat easier money policy.

But Mr. Schultze, on another program, said that no matter what the administration does, inflation cannot be eliminated without right monetary policies.

Mr. Weidenhaum denied that there is a serious clash between the administration and the Federal Reserve Board over the Fed's stranglehold on the nation's money. Administration officials have said publicly in the past few days that they are concerned that high interest rates might hurt the economy.

But Mr. Weidenhaum and Mr. Volcker said Federal Reserve and

Mr. Volcker discounted recurrent worries that high interest rates will throw the economy into a scvere recession. "I think there have been many more predictions of recession in the last three or four

Once Proud Castile Attempts to Arouse Regional Sentiment

New York Times Service

TORDESILLAS. Spain - lo Spanish history, Castile is a proud name. Today it is a lament. Castile once sallied out to conquer the world. Today it is merely a region.

As if they were playing a small joke on the past, legislators from Old Castile gathered bere recently and resolved that this hill town would be their capital.

They chose Tordesillas, which has 8,000 inhabitants and a few road junctions, not because it is particularly beautiful, or convenient, or important. They chose it because legislators from Burgos did not want Valladolid to be the capital, and legislators from Valladolid were against Burgos.

Tordesillas has had grander moments. In 1494, envoys from Portugal and Spain met bere and carved up the known world hetween them. A line traced on a map determined that Brazil became Portuguese, and the rest of South America Spanish.

In 1509, after wandering around her kingdom with the calcified body of ber husband, Queen Juana I of Castile came to rest in Tordesillas. Her son Carlos traveled bere, decided she was crazy, de-clared himself king and locked his mother up in Tordesillas for 46 years. History remembers her as Juana la Loca, or The Mad. The town is on a small hill, and this kept it from growing," said Jonas Castro Toledo, a priest who is also the historian of Tordesillas. When the Parliament met here. there weren't enough rooms for the nobles to stay in, so they went to Valladolid. Felipe III stayed bere when be was making Valladolid his capital. If Valladolid had remained the capital of Spain, Tordesillas might have been its Ver-

The legislators who are trying to give some life to the new administrative entity called Castile-Leon, which comprises nine depopulated rural provinces, will also face accommodation problems when they hold their deliberation here. But a graver issue is the absence of any regional feeling among the 2.6 mil-lion people in the new region.

"The truth is that there is no re-gional sentiment," said Miguel De-libes, the writer, whose novels evoke the emptiness and bleakness of Castile's plains. "We Castilians once made a world, and the idea of locking us ioto a little Castile does not give us much enthusiasm. This regional sentiment is a bit exclusivist, a bit provincial."

'State of Autonomies'

The death of Franco in 1975 unleashed repressed regional movements in Catalonia and the Basque provinces, which today enjoy limited home rule. But a novelin democratic Spain has been the birth, at times induced, of regional movements where they never existed before. The constitution of 1978 recognizes Spain as a "state of autonomies" — which remains to be defined in practice.

Castile is the oddest case. Castile was the handmaiden of the imperial exploits of the Spanish monarchs that left it, like them. exhausted and bankrupt. In Barcelo-na and Bilbao, it is fashionable to rail at "Castilian centralism," as if Ferdinand and Isabella were still in business. But, in fact, in modern times Castile bas been bled of men and money to stoke the industries of Barcelona and Bilbao.

At the turn of the century, the region had 2.3 million people. If Old Castile had grown with the rest of Spain, it would now bave million, instead of 2.6 million. Under Franco, its farms and villages were abandoned by families seeking a better life in the industrial centers of Spain and northern Europe. One can drive for miles without seeing a buman being on the parched land.

"Our men have followed our riches." said Jose Elias Perez Barragan, the 45-year-old Socialist mayor of Tordesillas. Like other local leftists, he got his first political experience in a clandestine labor organization in the Renault plant in nearby Valladolid, an island of industrial activity in agricultural Castile.

"I understand this Castilian regionalism as a kind of self-defense," said the mayor. "If Basques and Catalans are defending their interests, we bave to defend ours. we are forced to."

There is so little to defend. "It has been a slow death, and now I am afraid it is irreversible." said Mr. Delibes, ruminating on the bloodletting of population, wealth and even vital energy from Castile. There is less unemployment than in Andalusia, but there are no people. It is a desert."

Disputing Payments, Marshall Islanders Repossess Land Used in U.S. Missile Tests

By Robert Trumbull

New York Times Service HONOLULU - Marshallese families have begun repossessing islets in the Kwajalein Atoll, which they bad relinquished for U.S missile tests, in a move foreshadowing a confrontation with the United States over claims for millions of

According to Imada Kabua, president of the Kwajalein Atoll Corp., an organization representing the landowners, the move back to the islands is a protest against a delay by the Marshallese authorities in the payment, due in July, of $2.4 million received from the United States for distribution to the displaced islanders.

Mr. Kabua, who has extensive land rights in Kwajalein as a highranking chief, was in Honolulu to consult autorneys about larger claims that go back to 1944. Under a 1979 agreement be-tween the Marshall Islands and the United States, the islanders received about $6 million a year

Tremors Shake Mt. Etna

The Associated Press CATANIA, Sicily - In a new hurst of activity, tremors shook the Mount Eina volcano Monday at the rate of one a minute, raining ashes on towns on the slope in ocal authorities said wbat appeared to be a prelude to an eruption. The volcano last erupted for lands taken over for the missile-testing program — in which missiles fired from Vandenburg Air Force Base in California, 5,000 miles to the east, were shot down by other missiles fired from a $1 billion installation on Kwajalein, the atoll's main island.

One-Time Payment

The 1979 agreement superseded a 1964 arrangement under which the Marshallese received a onetime payment of $750,000, or $1,000 an acre, for U.S. rights to use the land for 100 years, dating from 1944, when U.S. forces seized Kwajalein from the Japanese.

The 1979 agreement expires at the end of September. The Kwajalein Atoll Corp. notified the Marshallese authorities in June that its members would refuse to permit use of their land by the United States after Sept. 30 unless they received assurances of "full and fair compensation" for use between 1944 and 1979.

In principle, Mr. Kabua said, the landowners want to extend the terms of the 1979 agreement backward to 1944, a formula that would cost $177 million if accepted hy Congress, which would have to appropriate the money. Howevthere are indications that the islanders might scale down their demands in negotiations.

Meanwhile, attorneys for about 5,500 Kwajalein landowners have a lawsuit pending in the High Court of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands seeking to nullify all agreements made between the United States and the Kwajalein people before the 1979 arrangement to pay $6 million annually.

The Marshall Islands and several other groups in the trust territory became self-governing in inter-nal affairs in 1979. The islands, known collectively as Micronesia, were taken from Japan by U.S. forces in World War II. In 1947 they were made a UN trusteeship, with the United States as the administering power.

The Reagan administration is reviewing tentative agreements with the Marshalls, the Palau group and a new entity called the Federated States of Micronesia, comprising Yap, Truk, Ponape and Kosrae, that would make these entities independent states at the end of the trusteeship, with the proviso that U.S. military rights in the area be retained. A fourth chain, the Northern Mariana Islands, has voted to become a U.S. commonwealth.

The reoccupation of the Kwa-jalein islands that had been surrendered for the missile project was prompted by the needs of numerous families planning to send younger members to Hawaii to resume their schooling, Mr. Kabua

Prompt payment of the $2.4 million now due to the displaced islanders probably would end the present protest campaign, he said, but not the campaign for compensation for the use of the lands from 1944 to 1979.

Afghan Rebels' Facade of Unity Cracks as Major Group Withdraws

By Tyler Marshall

Los Angeles Times Service PESHAWAR, Pakistan — Despite high morale and growing confidence in their ability to challenge Soviet forces in battle, major elements of the fractious Afghan resistance movement remain incapable of forging a united front. The most recent attempt at unity, aimed at pooling all political and military activities of the six largest resistance groups, has be-gun unraveling even before its offi-cial public debut, scheduled for a press conference later this week. The newly formed organization, known as the Islamic Unity of Mujahaddin, drew up a lengthy constitution in June, but one group has already pulled out after a fight over composition of the body's supreme council. At least one other group is likely to follow.

Mr. Rahim's assessment is correct. Vanity and Greed

In the 20 months since the Soviet Union intervened militarily in Afghanistan, at least four other attempts at unity have collapsed under the weight of personal jealousies, power grabs and professed ideological differences.

While simple vanity and greed have fostered much of the dissension, other factors also play a role. For example, some leaders with strong personal appeal but poorly organized groups see their interests best served by broadening the leadership of the resistance beyond the major parties. Sayid Ahmed Gailini of the National Islamic Front, who inherited the title of pir, or living saint, is one such

Some Advantages Seen

Mr. Hekmatyar is viewed as trying to expand his area of influence within Afghanistan by dislodging other groups from rebel-held territory. Surprisingly, the continued dissension among the largest rebei groups has apparently failed to blunt the overall effectiveness of the uprising against Soviet forces and troops of the beleaguered Af-

In fact, some observers say that the squabbling, uncoordinated mature of the resistance has worked to its advantage, making it impos-sible for the Russians to react to any logical overall strategy.

Israeli Kibbutz Seeks to Bring Back Arabian Horses

Washington Post Service I IBBUTZ GIVAT HAIM ICHUD, Israel - After years of exile in Europe and the United States, the proud Arabian borse of legend and poetry is being repatriated to the land where it once reigned nobly, its renaissance oearly as abrupt as its disappear-

In this vast kibbutz near the Mediterranean city of Netanya, Yiftak Levron's dream of bringing the Arabian horse back home is beginning to materialize.

Sleek mares imported from California and New York graze lazily in the warm sun, while foals cavort in the lush pasture. Young kibhutzniks proudly groom the growing herd, talking confidently of the day when the mar-ket for pure Arabians bred in Israel will be what it once was in the ancient Holy Land.

"For centuries, the Arabian has been known as the best horse in the world; there's no reason that this breed should be associated more with the United States and England than it is here," said Levron, a 30-year-old native Israeli who manages the kibbutz's Sa-bra Arabians breeding farm.

Bred by King Solomon

From before the time when the prophet Mohammed made his legendary night ride to Jerusalem and is said to have ascended to heaven astride his steed, Barak, the Arabian horse reigned in the land of Palestine.

King Solomon bred magnificent strains of Arabians in his Jerusalem stables, purchasing mares from the Arabian peninsula and selfing their offspring to other kings of the region. The charioteers of the Hittites and the armies of Egypt and Persia relied on the nerve and speed of the Arabian. The Macedonians, the Byzantines, the crusaders and the Turkish Ottomans owed their conquests to the fleet-footed breed.

But the supremacy of the Arabians of Palestine began to wane in World War I, when a departing Austrian cavalry division left behind hundreds of crossbred horses, called "whales," and the incoming British Army brought in hunters, hacks and other borses favored by the cavalry then. When the British left Palestine in 1948, they took with them most of the good Arabians. The purebreds left behind diminished in number as the government of modern Israel began importing sturdy, crossbred work horses from Hungary, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and Norway because they were lavored by Israeli farmers.

"They degraded the original desert strain," Levron said. "Almost overnight, the Arabian disappeared from the place of his roots."

A revival of interest in the Arabian began in 1967, when a horseman oamed Kurt Lowenthal met Count Stefan Zamoyski, an aficionado of Arabians, in London. Zamoyski established a purchasing commission to export Arabians to Israel, and an industry

First Imported in 1976

Kibbutz Givat Haim Ichud imported the first pure Arabians in 1976. They were do-nated by prominent Arabian hreeders, Yale Freed, owner of Briarwood Farms in Solvang, Calif., and N.E. Derecktor, of White Plains, N.Y.

Many members of the kibbutz fiercely op-posed the venture, recalled Willie Gilbert, who assists Levron at Sabra Arabians.

This didn't seem to be in the kibbutz tradition of hard work with the soil," Gilbert said. "A lot of people here thought it was a little too aristocratie or country-clubbish for a socialist kibbutz. A lot of them still do, but the wall of resistance is crumbling."

Decisions on investments in kibbutz ventures are made by communal consensus, and Levron had to persuade his colleagues that $4,000 spent for shipping a horse across the Atlantic could yield much more. Mares can produce a foal a year, and good Arabians can bring $10,000 or more abroad.

"The first two years of a horse's life are critical," Levron said. "He needs good climate, lots of sunshine and exercise. The conditions in Israel are perfect for breeding and raising horses."

Also Survives in Egypt

The only other country in the Middle East where the pure Arabian ideal survives, Levron noted, is Egypt, although even there the still competition from abroad has caused interest to flag. Jordan and Saudi Arabia still breed some Arabians, but nothing on the scale of which Levron is thinking.
"When people think of Arabians, I want them them to think of Israel," he said. "I don't want to breed the best Arabians in the Middle East. I want to hreed the best Arabians in the world."

To do that, he is attempting to return to the strain that is indigenous to the area, with a smaller head and slightly smaller body than the European-bred Arabians.

Sabra Arabians now has 15 pure Arabians, including 10 mares who are producing about six foals a year, and Levron's ambition is to build up the herd to the point where he can start selling in about five years. A potential market, he says, is the United States.

Now, Americans are buying Arabians from England, Sweden and other places in Europe," Levron said. "Why not from the Middle East, where they originated?"

Arabians, he said, can be used for racing, hunting, showing and jumping, and he thinks those bred in the Middle East should have an enhanced value abroad.

Other Breeding Programs

Similar Arabian breeding programs are getting under way at another Israeli kibbutz, Shaar Hagolan, in the Jordan valley, and at the new Cashvan Equine Center, associated with the Ben-Gurion University of the Negev.

Since he was a boy, Levron said, he has dreamed of raising pure Arabians and restoring their prominence here. Now, he said he saw his dream coming true.

"I'm proud of Israel, and I'm proud of my horses," he said. "The two belong together."

Kléber Firm Will Close Guidebook

By Frank J. Prial New York Times Service

PARIS — The Guide Kléber, France's second-oldest hotel and restaurant guide, is going out of business. Founded in 1954 as Le Guide des Touristes Gastronomes, the book became the Guide Kléber in 1961. It never achieved the prominence of its principal competitor, the famous red-covered Michelin, which was first pub-lished in 1900 and first rated restaurants in 1926. The 1980 edition of the Kleber sold about 200,000 copies; the Micbelio about 700,000.

The decision to cease publication was made by the Kleber Co. which, like Michelin, manufactures tires. In fact, Kleber is owned primarly hy Michelin and it was a re-cent influx of Michelin people into top Kleber posts that sealed the book's doom.

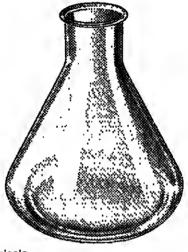

While the Kléber has partisans, an objective reader might have dif-ficulty finding much difference be-tween the two. The Kleber awards crowns to its favorite restaurants; the Michelin awards stars. The Kleber, this year, gave its top rat-ing to 25 restaurants. The Michelin has 21 three-star restaurants. Most of the restaurants on both lists are

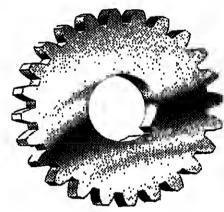

The Michelin guide depends on 12 full-time anonymous inspectors, working with the help of about 300,000 letters a year. The Kleber worked with about 100 part-time correspondents whose reports were correlated in Paris by the guide's

Chaos in Iran

The reigning order in Iran today is chaos. Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini presides, hut there is no direction. The bomh that killed President Mohammed Ali Rajai, Premier Mohammed Javad Bahonar and five others, was only the latest event in an extraordinary chronology of violence, which has substituted for politics in Iran in recent months.

Consider this partial listing of political killings since the dismissal of Aholhassan Bani-Sadr as president on June 22: A homb killed six in Qom; the director of Evin prison was shot to death; Ayatollah Mohammed Beheshti and 73 others died when a bomh exploded at Islamic Republican Party (IRP) headquarters; 13 persons were killed in political fighting in Kermanshah; a high official of the IRP, who was also a memher of parliament, was assassinated, and the Friday prayer leader of Kermanshah was killed. The list is incomplete and it does not take account of the wounded. Security obviously, is not the mullahs' strong suit.

Of course, it is not only the opposition that kills. During the same period the government is reported to have executed hetween 600 and 800 Iranians for the catch-all offense of "corruption on earth and crimes against God," which in practice means anything from heing a member of the leftist Islamic Mujahaddin to belonging to the Baha'i religion or com-

As far as the outside world is concerned such matters as the stalled war with Iraq or the need to increase oil production - who can say what the next hatch of Iranian leaders will do? The future is as murky as the past is hloody. It is a toss-up whether the Islamic regime is more chaotic than the fragmented opposition, which includes groups headed hy an ex-admiral of the shah's navy, the last premier under the shah and the irrepressible Mr. Bani-Sadr, who told Richard Eder of The New York Times last week that if five men were killed, the Iranian regime would collapse. Two of the five are now dead, hut there's no way of knowing what kind of a prophet Iran's former president will

Posturing on El Salvador

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. renewed his denunciations the other day of terrorism by leftist guerrillas in El Salvador. Simultaneously. France and Mexico were extending a sort of semi-recognition to the guerrillas as a "representative political force." Their announcement illustrates an ahiding principle of world politics: When U.S. diplomacy becomes assertive, other governments frequently look for public gestures hy which to disassociate themselves from it. In this case, the price of the gesture is likely to be paid by the unhappy people caught in the midst of the fighting.

In France, a Socialist president has been elected by an alliance of the traditional left with a lot of voters who simply didn't like his predecessor. That produces a hybrid foreign policy. On the vital questions of European defense and Soviet relations, President Francois Mitterand is firm and unsentimental. But on El Salvador he has taken an inexpensive opportunity to demonstrate to the French that his heart is, after all, with the left. In Mexico, the government is moving toward elections. The style of its self-perpetuating ruling party is to remain well to the right on internal matters, particularly in anything involving economics, but to balance it by a dramatically leftist approach to foreign affairs.

Perhaps it will occur to you that all of this explanation has less to do with the realities of the warfare in El Salvador than with the pressures of domestic politics in other countries. Unfortunately, Mr. Haig invites this kind of a response when he persists in presenting the fighting in stark terms of a struggle of forces of light and darkness. Cuba is demonstrahly an important source of weapons to a guerrilla movement. But to cut off the Cuban shipments would probably not, by itself, end the fighting. To overstate the Cuban influence is an error of perspective -similar to, although less gross than, the error of those Europeans who say that the guerrillas are merely good Socialists like themselves who believe in democracy, civil liberties and social prog-

The first effect of the French-Mexican gesture will be to encourage the guerrillas. The second effect will be to increase the sense of isolation within El Salvador's government, and its dependence on security forces over which its control is already inadequate. The ultimate effect will be to increase the desperate determination on both sides to press for a military solution, regardless of the casualties and the desolation of the country. The present display of international posturing is profoundly unhelpful to any attempt to restore peace under a stable government representing a majority of the people who actually live in El Salvador.

Air Strike Is Lost. Now What?

President Reagan has done it: He has proved that the air controllers' union could not extort a favorable wage settlement by stopping the planes. But now that his victory is obvious, it's time to change strategy. Everyone's interest, that of the president, the strikers and the public, would now be served by offering to rehire the controllers - on the government's terms.

By refusing to cave in to this illegal strike, the president has set a commendable precedent that is already paying dividends in relations with other unions. Though many postal workers were said to be unsatisfied with the terms recently negoniated by their union leaders, the contracts have been ratified. Labor oratory has shifted noticeably from militancy to conciliation.

The air controllers' union is not about to admit that the strike is lost. It clings to the hope that controllers from other countries will disrupt traffic, forcing the administration to the negotiating table. And in any case, the union hopes that public concern over safety might do the same.

But these are thin strands. A strike, the withholding of work, is labor's sword. When, week after week, the system works without the workers, their sword is hroken.

The hard line has been the right one so far, hut that does not mean it will continue to be. The United States could, if necessary, make do with limited air service until the air control system is restaffed from scratch. But it would be foolish to underestimate the costs of doing so - or overestimate the henefits.

The government says it will take about two years to hring the system up to full strength with new recruits. During that time the FAA plans to restrict flights to about 80 percent of normal. In parts of the country with light air traffic, the impact would be negligible. On some routes, larger aircraft can make up for fewer flights. But there's no denying that many travelers will suffer costly inconvenience; last-minute reservations will be harder to come by, peak-hour service will be re-

Equally important, the public will lose the benefits of air deregulation. In the two years since federal regulation over routes and fares was relaxed, increased competition has cut the cost of flying and improved service be-tween many cities. With more passengers competing for fewer flights, bargain fares are sure to disappear.

The public and the economy need not suffer these costs. There is an alternative to starting from scratch. The president could allow the strikers to apply for their old jobs and go hack to their radar consoles. But there would be penalties.

They might, for example, lose their newly negotiated wage increase, their seniority and any perks earned by seniority. Those controllers who have worked through the strike would be rewarded with better pay and a faster track to the top. To insure that rehiring of illegal strikers does not encourage other illegal strikes, Patco, the strikers' union, would lose recognition as the controllers' hargaining agent.

If just half of the 13,000 strikers returned under these conditions, air service could quickly be restored to normal. There would be political henefits, too. Opinion polls suggest that the most Americans are behind the president, but are uneasy about the harshness of his actions.

The decision to fire the strikers was justified. Now, with victory in hand, there is every reason to temper justice with mercy:-THE NEW YORK TIMES.

A Blow to the Mounties

The somewhat tarnished legend of the Roval Canadian Mounted Police has been dealt a further hlow hy the report on their illegal activities.

For most Canadians, and for people elsewhere, the Mounties are almost a Canadian national symbol.

Mr. Kaplan's predecessors in his office were, like him, responsible for the Mounties; and the force's security units reported directly to the prime minister in cases of emergency. Plotting a U.S. Mineral Policy

By Stansfield Turner and George Thibault

WASHINGTON — The grow-ing U.S. dependence on foreign supplies of minerals is receiving much deserved attention from the Reagan administration. Manganese, chromium, cobalt and a lew other minerals are virtually indispensable in certain industrial processes, yet we must import almost all that we consume. Dependence on foreign sources, however, is not the same thing as vulnerability. The United States is not as vulnerable to blackmail in street. as vulnerable to hlackmail in strategic minerals as is commonly portrayed.

The degree of our vulnerability is worth examining as we pass judgment on the kind of measures that are being proposed today; bundreds of millions of dollars for stockpiling; tax incentives; changes in federal land policy; depreciation allowances to encourage exploration at home; changes in ecological standards for manufac-turing, and adjustments to our for-eign policy with respect to nations that are vital sources of supply.

Examine the Options

We should, indeed, examine such options, but we need not do so with a sense of near panic. Our common heritage of protected wilderness areas and federal lands is at stake, as well as decades of careful planning to preserve them. Our relations with nations large and small that have been dependable suppliers of minerals for many years are also at issue. We should take time to develop a sensible minerals policy that will meet the administration's objectives without affecting adversely either our envi-ronment or international relations.

Here are some of the facts: The world is not running out of natural resources. Proved reserves, which are most often used in forecasts of scarcity, ignore the almost daily discovery of new reserves of most resources. As the need increases, private incentive to find and develop new reserves increases

The Bureau of Mines, for example, has reported that proved world reserves of chromite, which is essential to the metals industry and 100 percent of which is imported, have increased by 248 per-cent in the last decade alone. Similarly with manganese, 98 percent of which is imported and for which there are no practical substitutes in the production of iron and steel, there are over 200 years worth of land reserves of manganese at cur-rent use levels, as well as extensive entapped ocean flour deposits.

The best analytical data indicate that there will be plenty of miner-als available for all known uses

Demand is not constant. The advance of technology increases the use of some minerals while lessening the use of others, making yesterday's scarcity tomorrow's

A study in 1974 hy Arthur D. Little for the Navy, "Dependence of the United States in Essential Imported Materials to the Year 2000," said, "The United States has the resources necessary to ob-tain self-sufficiency in most essen-tial materials ... even for those few minerals which may not be in adequate supply, substitute materials and technological development of new production processes are expected to fill the gap."

Embargoes Unlikely

Some minerals are virtually in-terchangeable in their industrial applications, such as gold and platinum, nickel and cobalt. The use of the one rather than the other is largely controlled by the marketplace. Embargoes are unlikely. Numerous studies have pointed out the unlikelihood of sustained deliberate embargoes. The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, of course, did embargo oil in 1973, but no combination of mineralsupplying countries seems likely to be able to develop as a similar car-tel. One reason is that embargoes generally do not make economic sense, especially for developing na-tions. It is in their interest to sell regularly and at the best price. This may be their sole source of foreign exchange. In fact, as supplier nations become accustomed to having this source of foreign exchange, their appetites grow and they usually try to increase production and exports. Basically, though, there are just too many alternative suppliers in the field of minerals.

Manipulation of prices is unlikely. The real damage OPEC has done was not from the 1973 embargo, but from the price increases in 1974 and 1979. With minerals there is no such leverage available to a potential cartel. The total cost of mineral imports to the United States is so small that even a major change in pricing would not have a substantial effect on our economy — for example, we spend $45 billion on oil; the largest mineral import is iron ore at $1 hillion.

Seabed Nodules

The United States has large untapped reserves, as well as respect-able stockpiles of most minerals. Economics and politics are the ma-jor reasons why U.S. reserves have not been developed. For example, the boundaries of a cobalt mine in ldaho were redrawn outside of public lands so that its potential could be tapped, but its owners chose not to open the mine because it is cheaper to import cobalt from Africa.

Large reserves of cobalt as well as manganese exist in deep seabed nodules which the United States may be the only nation technologi-

Her suggestion might have had some validity had she written it prior to 1976. It was in that year that the current five-year treaty between the United States and Spain was negotiated which contained the timetable for the withdrawal of nuclear submarines from Rota. The last of the Polaris submarines left Rota in July. 1979, an act that received wide media coverage. Furthermore, the United States does not now store nuclear weapons at its facility on the Spanish naval base of Rota or anywhere else in Spain, in accordance with provisions of the 1976 treaty.

Ever since, the bush war is about how power is to be transferred. On the assumption that SWAPO would win elections, Pretoria has been trying to arrange a system that would assure its continued dominance. There has been little mention lately of Jonas Savimbi's UNITA guerrillas, backed by South Africa in his fight against the Marxist Angolan government. But they and the nearby South African forces in Namibia are the main reason An-gola keeps the Cubans, who are a severe common drain.

If anything, the deep raids are ikely to increase Angoian reliance on Soviet arms and proxies. This is obviously against U.S. interests. Strained Ties

There won't be any better way out than pressing hard for Namib-an elections. Both South African and SWAPO leaders have admitted their war can't be won. But it can drag on and be escalated.

So even clean-air policies are, in a sense, water policies. And water policies will become national preoccupations in this decade.

One-quarter of the water used in the United States depends on ancient underground deposits aquifers — built up over millennia but depletable in decades. The na-tion's estimated 59,000 utilion gallons of ground water are 45 times the volume of Lake Michigan, and many times the amount of water that has flowed from the Mississip-pi into the Gulf of Mexico in the last 200 years. But between 1950 and 1980, annual consumption of ground water more than doubled to about 25 trillion gallons. Every day the nation takes 21 billion gallons more from the ground than seeps back into deposits.

The thickness of major water beds varies from 200 to 1,000 feet, and in Texas and Kansas the water table has been falling between two and five feet a year. California farmers are pumping 2 million acre-feet (652 billion gallons) more than is replaced each year. In parts of California's San Joaquin valley, the land has sumk 29 feet as groundwater has been pumped, and the compression of the land makes it impossible to fully re-

As fresh water drains from aquifers, salt water from oceans or underground salt deposits can seep in. Small amounts can make aquifer water undrinkable for millennia. Waste from feedlots, fertilizers and pesticides and crosion from farmland, and bacteria from sewage pollute groundwater. Salt spread promiscuously on icy highways finds its way into aquifers: In many Massachusetts communities people on low-sodium diets are advised to drink bottled water.

The Ogaliala aquifer, with a volume equivalent to that of Lake Huron, serves hundreds of millions of farm acres in Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas. Irrigation takes more water from the Ogallala than the entire flow of the Colorado River, but in five of the six states irrigated acreage is declining and the aquifer may be effectively exhausted in 40 years.

An average of 4.2 trillion gallons of precipitation falls on the contignous 48 states daily, but 92 percent evaporates immediately or runs off, unused, to oceans. More water must be captured for use and more used water must be recycled. And agriculture, which accounts for 87 percent of used water, must use it more efficiently. Today, unreasonably cheap water encourages, for example, wasteful "flood irriga-tion." The runoff washes into streams bundreds of thousands of tons of mineral saits which accumulate in, and damage, lands that use the water downstream.

U.S. agriculture, the principal sustainer of the nation's standard of living, is among the most science-intensive industries. It will when spurred by rising prices make extraordinary efficiencies in water use. Already some Western fields are flecked with little reflectors that enable lasers to guide graders that level fields to within a one percent variation, thereby minimizing runoff. This and other technologies should enable water savings of 20 to 50 percent. What is less certain is a sensible water policy from Washington, where at least 70 congressional committees are involved. Furthermore, states are fiercely protective of their traditional rights regarding water. But the doctrine of "states' rights" is nowhere more anachronistic than regarding water, and not just in the West. For example, Boston, which loses about one-third of its water through leakage from its ancient system, has aroused resistance from Canada to New York with a proposal to pump more Connecticut River wa-

But the Reagan administration is chock-full of Westerners blind to the connection, philosophical as well as etymological, between con-servation and conservatism, properly understood. The admi tion is apt to defend the traditional Washington role regarding water, primarily a role of providing subsidized water for the West — a tradition dating from the days when westward migration had to be cocouraged.

Out West, detestation of the federal government by "sagebrush rebels" stops well short of a desire for fewer reclamation dollars. And reverence for the market stops well short of a belief that users should pay market value for water.

U.S. Debates Gold-Backed Dollar Monetarists Take Heat as Supply-Siders Build Campaign

By Caroline Arkinson Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Four years ago, when the Republicans first proposed the Kenn Roth supply side tax bill, few people took the idea seniously. Today, the basic Kemp-Roth idea is law.

Now the people who helped bring about last month's tax-cut bill are pushing for a return to the gold standard and many people are laughing again. But maybe not as hard.

There is, after all, always the chance that opponents of the gold standard might find themselves outmaneuvered by supporters, just as rithers found themselves left behind over tax cuts.

The aim of supply-siders is nothing less than a commitment from the Reagan administration — and commitment from the Reagan administration — and the Federal Reserve — to a path leading toward dollar convertibility" into gold, said Jude Wanniski, a strong backer of supply-side economics.

Mr. Wanniski and a small group of conservatives have succeeded in focusing greater attention on the Gold Commission, set up by Congress last year to study the potential role of gold in the money system. Although gold promoments are in the minority on the Although gold proponents are in the minority on the commission and in the administration, they still hope to persuade the president of the wisdom of their

[The debate gained momentum Sunday when Murray Weidenbaum, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, said the Reagan administration is seriously studying the possibility of returning the United States to the gold standard, United Press Internatinal reported.

["We have a gold commission, established by law, to study that question," he said in a television interview. "As a member of the commission, I assure you

we are taking that assignment very, very senously."

[At the same time, Federal Reserve Board Cheirman Paul Volcker, questioned on another television program, said the suggestion to peg the dollar to gold reflects "wishful thinking — that somehow there's some magic pill out there we can take, and if we only go back to the gold standard, have a big tax cut or

That, I think, is an illusion," he said, adding that he would advise the president not to go back to the gold standard at this time.]

Ironically, the gold standard advocates have concentrated the fire on monetarists, who are heavily represented in the administration and whose goal of slowing money growth is a key part of President Reagan's economic program. The reason can be found in today's record high interest rates.

Supply-side economists first claimed that large, multiyear tax cuts would revive the economy. But they and other Republicans now fear that if interest rates stay high, as they have this summer, they will strangle this revival.

Other economists said all along that a boom was incompatible with falling inflation and interest rates. But supply-siders will not give up easily.

Gold can bring rates down, some now argue.

Arthur Laffer, architect of the notion that tax cuts can pay for themselves, said recently that monetary reform based on a return to the gold standard is 10 times as important for the economy as supply-side

Two Top Banks Trim Prime Rate; Wall Street Prices Close Off 10.75

From Agency Dispatches
NEW YORK — The stock market got off to a strong start Monday after two major banks cut their prime rate to 20 percent from 20½ percent. But later prices turned down and closed sharply lower on the belief the Federal Reserve would not relent on its tight credit policy.

The Dow Jones industrial average gained six points in the first half bour of trading, but then changed direction and closed off 10.75 at 881.47, its lowest since July 2, 1980 when it hit 876.02. Declines led advances by about 1,000 to 500 and volume rose to some 41 million shares from 38 million Friday.

Chase Manhattan Bank and
First National Bank of Chicago cut their prime lending rate, thus encouraging some investors. The small Mitsui Manufacturers Bank of Los Angeles also lowered. But analysts said investors were disappointed when the Federal Reserv early in the day allowed the fed funds rate to rise to 174 from 164. These moves had been andcipated since Federal Reserve late Fri-day reported a surprisingly large $3.7-billion decline in the money supply, setting the stage potential ly for lower rates. In the credit markets, the rise in Bond prices fell as much as 24 points, leaving the benchmark 13%'s at its record low of 94%. while Treasury bill yields rose as much as ½ point.

The White House responding to Wall Street woe said President

Reagan's economic policies will not take hold until later this year and that investors' doubts about the policies "will be cleared up in due course."

Larry Speakes, the deputy press secretary, answering questions concerning published reports that recent sluggishness in the stock market could be attributed to uncertainty about the Reagan economic package, said the adminis tration plans nn special effort to promote Mr. Reagan's program on

Mr. Speakes repeated the administration's prediction that the

U.S. Dollar Shows Strength Despite Cut in Prime Rate

NEW YORK — The U.S. dollar continued to strengthen Monday despite a drop in the prime rate. The dollar firmed to 2.4527 Deutsche marks at midsession, dealers said. This compares with an opening 2.4430 DM and Fri-day's finish at 2.4415.

Trading was very quiet and thin, reflecting the closing of the Lon-don market for a bank holiday.

dealers noted. A rise in the federal funds rate to 17 percent from 16% percent at the opening contributed to the dollar's firmer tone. Dealers noted the dollar was weaker in Europe this morning in reaction to Friday's report of an unexpectedly large decline in U.S. money supply, but it rebounded in U.S. markets as operators covered short posicons. News that the cut in prime rate by twn major banks to 20 percent from 201/2 percent had little impact since it only reflected the recent easing in the cost of funds for banks, dealers said.

In Zurich, gold closed at $427.50 an ounce, sharply below the day's highs, but up from Friday's close of $425.50.

The price rose quickly to highs around $435 shortly after the opening on speculation that the as-sassination of the president and premier of Iran might sustain higher levels in the short term, dealers said. The price soon eased, they

The recovery by the dollar in the afternoon contributed to gold's relapse to levels in the $425 range,

Dealers said the market still holds the view that U.S. interest rates will remain high for some time partly reflecting the heavy borrowing needs anticipated for the Treasury in coming months.

In New York, The dollar firmed above 2.45 DM around midday af-ter the Treasury announced it would sell $2 billion of nine-day cash management bills on Wednes-day, adding to an already heavy supply of new government issues.
The dollar gained to 2.1480
Swiss francs from an opening 2.1345, while sterling slipped to $1.8390 from $1.8525.

Institutions Shed Oil Stocks in 2d Quarter

By Charles J. Elia

AP-Dow Jones NEW YORK - Investment institutions

turned even more bearish on oil stocks in the second quarter than they were in the first. Overall, however, the institutions were pouring money into other sectors of the market as the current quarter began.
Changes in stockholdings by entities man-

The group includes mutual funds, which were net sellers of $727 million of stocks. The data suggest that banks, insurance companies, investment advisers and other large investment organizations were overly bullis in increasing their equity exposure. Matthöfer Cuts Budget Plan Further

BONN - West German Finance Minister Hans Matthöfer has announced a proposal for an austere 1982 federal budget with government spending of 240.1 billion Deutsche marks, up by 3.9 percent over this year but reflecting a further cut of 700 million DM from the figure the Cabinet proposed July 30 as a guideline.

The proposal, made as Chancel-lor Heimut Schmidt's Social Dem-ocrats prepared for coalition talks. Tuesday with the Free Democrats headed by Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, was seen as a move by Mr. Matthofer to come nearer to the FDP position. Mr. Genscher has warned against extensive spending programs, particularly a controversial program aimed at easing unemployment.

The two parties had informal talks during the weekend on the budget, and the Cabinet is to vote on it Wednesday.

Mr. Matthofer, in a letter to parties to the budget talks, said he proposes to maintain the original target of limiting 1982 government net borrowing to 26.5 billion DM, down from about 34 billion DM this year. Net borrowing is seen falling consistently to reach 18.8 billion DM in 1985. Mr. Matthofer also said government spending would increase by an annual average of 4 percent in the years after 1982, reaching 268.7 billion DM in 1985.

No change is planned in the budget's major allocation, Labor Ministry spending, which would remain at 54.425 billion DM. A total of 43.728 billion DM is to be allocated for 1982 military spending under the plan, a 4-percent rise from 1981 but a drop in inflation-adjusted terms that could approach 1.9 percent. The plan provides for total sav-

Money could only be created if there were gold to back it, and as gold production rises only slowly, so money growth, too, would be limited. The slow money growth would lead to lower inflation, the

But the Federal Reserve is already operating a tight, slow growth money policy to fight infla-tion. Indeed, high interest rates are a direct result of this policy.

The demand for money and and wage bargamers were sure of credit from a still-strong economy Mr. Reagan and the Federal Re-cannot be satisfied by the restricted supply, so the price, or interest rate, has risen. But if interest rates are forced up because money is tight, it makes no difference whether money growth is limited by being tied to gold or some other money rule.

However, gold advocates argue that rates are high because people cannot trust the administration and the Federal Reserve to keep to anti-inflationary policies if these start to threaten growth and employment, rather than simply be-cause money is tight.

If, on the other hand, the advocates continue, financial markets serve, they would accept lower in-terest rates and lower wage increases now in the expectation of lower inflation in the future.

The implication is that people will trust the government if there is a gold standard, but not otherwise. But an administration that goes to a gold standard can loosen that standard or abandon it, just as it can break a promise to balance the budget or cut money growth.

Financiers are likely to be just as skeptical of Mr. Reagan's ability to keep to a gold standard as they are of the government's commitment to keep money tight and fight inflation. And wage negotiators would probably pay as little attention to an announcement of a return to the gold standard as they do to promises of tight money.

From a practical viewpoint, a golden lid on money would work on the economy just as any other tight money policy: through restricting output and employment growth. Wage and price increases would collide with the limited supply of money. As the economy slowed under the impact of the credit crunch, firms would be unable to sell all they wanted, and some workers would lose their

Chrysler Tentatively Plans 7.7% Rise in 1982 Prices

From Agency Dispatcher
DETROIT — Chrysler said
Monday it has tentatively raised prices on 1982 model cars an average of $622, or 7.7 percent over 1981 levels. But company officials strongly hinted that the price might be trimmed by the time the new models go on sale beginning in October.

The steep increase followed an announcement by General Motors last month that the average sticker price of its 1982 cars would be in-creased by $617. Ford has not announced 1982 prices. Chrysler, which has enjoyed increased sales but is still hungry for cash, apparently concentrated the price increases in its best-selling cars in an attempt to squeeze the maximum profit out of its sales. GM, the industry's pricing lead-

CAMERA LUCIDA

Reflections on Photography By Roland Barthes Translated by Richard Howard. 119 pp. $10.95. Hill Wang/ Farrar, Straus & Giroux. 19 Union Square West, New York 10003.

DESPITE a spate of writings on photography in recent years—Susan Sootag's "On Photography." Janet Malcolm's "Diana & Nikon." Max Kozloff's "Photography & Fascination," — the posthumous publication of Roland Barthes' thoughts on the medium raises musually high exthe medium raises unusually high ex-pectations. For Barthes, one of the high priests of contemporary intellecopinion, to consider photography, an arriviste in the arena of high culture, would seem certain to secure its importance. More so since Barthes' relatively brief considerations of photography in "Mythologies" and "Image-Music-Text" held out the promise that a full-scale analysis would create new ways of thinking and talking about photographs about photographs.

"Camera Lucida" is oot, however. the definitive reappraisal of photogra-phy that was anticipated. It does not reveal the long-sought "grammar" of photographs, nor does it provide much in the way of clues to their "reading." It is more intimate than theoretical Barthes bites into photography like Proust bites into a madeleine and what results is an intri-cate, quirky and ultimately frustrating meditation linking photography to

Like "The Pleasure of the Text" (1975), in which Barthes speaks to a sense of erotic play in literature.
"Camera Lucida" forsakes the analysic methods on which the author built his reputation in favor of a more personal discourse. Barthes contends that a photograph, because it is "never dis-tinguished from its referent (from what it represents)," resists semiotic analysis, which presupposes a division between an image and its referent. But one suspects a more personal motive behind his impulse to abandon semiotics. Barthes writes of his "uneasiness" at being "torn between two languages, one expressive, the other criocal," of his "ultimate dissatisfaction" with the critical discourses of "sociology, of semiology, and of psy-choanalysis," and of his "desperate resistance to any reductive system." Seen to relation to "The Pleasure of Text," his reflections on photography merely confirm his growing disaffection with semiotics and his decision to use his own emotions as a prime source of insight.

Studium and Punctum

Barthes' attempt to shift from a critical discourse to a more intimate mode is not fully accomplished, though, and much of "Camera Lucida" reads like a battle between the two languages. Following his "old" manner, he categorizes the effects that photographs can have upon viewers. His primary insight is to divide the source of a photograph's affect into two categories, which he labels studium and punction. The studium of a photograph, according to Barthes, is its culturally determined context; the studium is the source of the viewer's usually mild, "polite interest" in a photograph, "the same sort of vague, slippery, irresponsible interest one takes in the people, the entertainments, the books, the clothes" that one finds "all right." The punction breaks through this complacency of response, provoking a more intense and personal reaction in the viewer, it is usually that detail, "that accident which pricks me (but also bruises me, is poignant to me)."

Citing a 1926 James Van DerZee

portrait of a black family dressed in their Sunday best, he locates the studium in its context of "respectability, family life, conformism . . an ef-fort of social advancement in order to assume the White Man's attributes." The punctum, for Barthes, arises from the details of the younger woman's low slung belt and strapped pumps: "Mary Janes — why does this dated fashion touch me?" he asks. While the mystery of the Mary Janes remains unsolved, the point is clear: the puncrum is that part of the photograph that cannot be casually, disinterested ly observed. In the case of the Van DerZee photograph, the punctum gave "the hlack woman in her Sunday best . . . a whole life external to her portrait."

The ultimate effect of punction is the intimation of death. This Barthes realizes in the personal context of his bereavement over the still recent death of his mother; looking at a por-trait of her as a young girl (a picture he declined to reproduce in "Camera Lucida"), he sees that her death im-plies his own. From this he arrives at the broad conclusion that every photograph contains the sign of his death, and that the essence of photography is

Solution to Previous Puzzle

Reviewed by Andy Grundberg the implied message. That has been. It is no coincidence that Barthes is given to quoting Proper Project's obsession with memory Barthes' obsession with death Proust's immense powers of recall en-body all that Barthes hopes to extrect from a photograph but which, intract-ably, the photograph refuses to yield;

Reductive Thinking

Compared to Susan Sontag's link age of photography to the sesthetic of Surrealism, or even John Berger's of ten programmatic Marxist discoveries, Barthes' contribution to photo-graphic theory seems meager. The asfrom and the panetian, tied as they are to the subjective reactions of indexes. al viewers, are not suppose tools to analytic reasoning, rather, they are the last links in a chun of reduction thinking If the essence of the phose to a dead end. Part of the problem in that Barthes' view of photographs practice is limited; his preference for portrainure, there more commy for portrainure, there more the phone find death lurking behind the phone graph's visage. Primarily, though Barthes' conclusions clear no span arthur or claboration. Walter Benjamin's notion of the tiny spark of accident" in photo-graphs, found in his 1931 energy, " Short History of Photography, be Barthes's source for the purchase however. How can photography be a modernist art if it cannot also the burden of its referent? Such a mast tionary notion, (also shared by Benjamin), puts more emphasis on subject matter than most contemporary place tography critics have been willing to allow. Similarly, Barthes' sense of days it's advocacy leads him to dismiss the photography-was-invented-by-penting theory (most recently advanced by Peter Galassi of the Museum of Most. ern Art) in a single sentence. No same Barthes, the essential fact is that Ea was invented by chemists.

But just as "Camera Lucida" is sent to confound its photographic and ence, it will dismay the proponents of semiotics. Besides repeating his earlier position that the photograph has an code, in effect making it unavailable to semiotic inquiry. Barthes summe ly rejects the prevailing semiotic view of the roedium.

A Magic, Not an Art

"It is the fashion, nowadays, among photography's commentators (social ogists and semiologists), to seize upod a seminuc relativity; no 'realist (great scorn for the 'realists' who not see that the photograph is always coded), nothing but artifice. . . . realists, of whom I am one. . . not take the photograph for a copp of reality, but for an emanation of 1601 ic, not in art." Raiders Say Stabler's Association With Gambler Was a Factor in 1980 Trade

This article was reported by John M. Crevidion and Wendell Rawls Jr. It was written by Mr. Crewdson.

OAKLAND, Calif. - Despite repeat. ed warnings from executives of the Oakland Raiders. Ken Stables, one of the most successful quarterbacks in professional football, persisted in his association with a well-known New Jersey gambling figure who is an associate of the Princeton-based Simone DeCavalcante organized crime family.

Inquiries by reporters in a half-dozen cities show that according to federal and local law enforcement officials as well as the Raiders, Stabler's association with the gambler, Nicholas Dudich of Perth-Amboy, N.J., began and grew during his last four seasons with the Raiders. Oakland traded Stabler to Houston in 1980.

Stabler's relationships with gambling figures generated increasing concern within the Raider organization and with the team's owner, Al Davis, to the point that, Davis said in an interview, they became a factor in his decision to trade

Davis resisted characterizing Stabler's activities while a member of the Raiders. "I would not deny to you that there was an association," he said. "You understand? I would not deny to you that I was concerned about it. I would not deny to you that I talked about it several times. I would not deny to you that I league office ... and alert them to

Since he led the Raiders to the Super Bowl championship on Jan. 9, 1977, Stabler, according to a variety of law-enforcement sources, has been subjected to physical surveillance and other investigations here and in Houston. All of the investigations, which have since been terminated, proved inconclusive, these sources said.

The investigations focused on Stabler's continuing associations with Dudich, a convicted bookmaker. East Coast law enforcement officials specializing in organized crime identified Dudich as being associated with the DeCa-valcante family.

Associations Not Illegal

Law-enforcement officials emphasized that such associations were by themselves not illegal and that Stabler had not been accused of any crime.

But the National Football League annually warns its players about avoiding gamblers. The NFL has said it fears that such associations might encourage at-tempts by bookmakers and other gamblers to bribe players to influence the outcome of games.

At his home, Dudich, 63 on Monday, was asked if he knew Stabler. He told a reporter, "Get out of here." Asked if he had met Stabler, he said, "I don't know nothing." Asked again if he had met

Stabler, Dudich said, "I went to watch

some football games, that's all." Stabler surprised many people associated with and interested in pro football last month by announcing his retirement just as the Oilers were gathering at the team's summer training camp. But earlier this month he signed a two-year contract for an annual salary reported at

After an exhibition game with Dallas Saturday night Stabler would only say: "If the media would leave me alone and let me play football, everything would be all right. If you want to talk football, I'll talk football."

Davis said Stabler "did hang around with some people I didn't like." "We discussed it with him," he said. "We did get into arguments over it." Davis said Raider officials "must have reported it to the league 15 times" between 1976

But, Jack Danahy, who until July of last year was in charge of the National Football League security staff, said: "The Raiders definitely did not talk to ns even a half-dozen times, and certainly not a many as they are claiming. I remember talking to Al LoCasale one time about this in the past few years, and the lady who was my secretary then said there may have been one other call over a space of time. But 15 or 25 calls? Oh, no." LoCasale is the executive as-

Pete Rozelle, the National Football League commissioner, said he had "never heard anything about" Dudich and had never been advised of his association with Stabler or any other NFL player. "I never got a report on anything of this kind," he said.

Rozelle declared that the league would now investigate the report of Stabler's contacts with Dudich. "We investigate anything like this that comes to the public's attention," Rozelle said, "and especially anything that questions the integrity of the individual players in

He said his staff would carefully review league files on Monday to see what information had been forwarded to the league or developed by the staff. "I'm sure Warren Welsh [who replaced Danahy] already is working on it."

According to several former Oakland Raider team members and executives, Dudich, who has been arrested at least seven times in connection with gambling activities in the New Jersey area and who has two convictions on bookmak-ing charges, in 1948 and 1957, was first noticed by the Raiders during the 1976 season. In 1977, Dudich was a frequent visitor to the team's summer training camp in Santa Rosa, Calif., 40 miles north of here, where one player remem-bered him as "this lonesome old man

Some former players remembered Dudich as being especially friendly with Stabler. LoCasale said it was that same year that he first cautioned Stabler and his lawyer, Henry Pitts, that "this guy, according to information we have, is not someone you ought to be hanging around with." He said Pitts had simply replied. "OK."

Despite the warnings, several former layers said, when the Raiders assembled for summer camp in 1978, Dudich also arrived in Santa Rosa and registered at the El Rancho Tropicana, the motel at which the team was quartered. As in the previous year, the players remembered. Dudich and Stabler were often seen chatting in Stabler's suite or dining at a nearby restaurant.

Another former player recalled that after the season began, Dudich was seen speaking with Subler in the lobby of the botel in Green Bay, Wis., where the Raiders were staying, and in the lobbies of the team's hotels in Chicago, San Diego, Kansas City and other cities where the Raiders were playing. In Seattle, one player said, Dudich told him he was waiting for Stabler.

Stabler, who completed 59 percent of his pass attempts in 1976 (then a record for accuracy surpassed only by one other quarterback, Sammy Baugh of the Washington Redskins, in the 61-year history of professional foothall), recorded his worst season in 1978, when 30 of his passes were intercepted.

In 1979, Dudich was seen in Canton, Ohio. where the Raiders played in the Football Hall of Fame exhibition game, and LoCasale said he made another report to the league of Dudich's presence. Dudich was seen again in the lobby of the Essex House Hotel in New York City two days before the Raiders played the Jets, asking several members of the Raiders "Where's Kenny?" The Raiders, who were favored by professional oddsmakers, lost to the Jets, 28-19. Five Stabler passes were intercepted.

Curious Exchange

According to several former players, Dudich was not seen around the team again that year, but it was during that ason that the association first came to the attention of federal investigators after an employee of an Oakland hotel noticed Stabler and an older man standing together in the hotel's gift shop, apparently reading magazine

The employee, who asked not to be named, said her curiosity was piqued by the fact that the two men were whispering to each other in an apparent effort not to be overheard. The woman, who was in Stabler's company on some social occasions, said she was standing about three feet behind the men. She was making a purchase at the newsstand. She said she watched them for several sec-onds before they separated. Neither bought a magazine.

She said she mentioned the incident

Patriots, With Grogan at the Helm, Seem Destined for the Super Bowl

By William N. Wallace

New York Times Service NEW YORK - The National Football League's 62d season begins on Saturday night in Tampa where the Minnesota Vikings play the Buccaneers. The season may be the last of its kind because next year will bring a new argeoment with the players association, one likely to change the league's struc-ture if the athletes win their demands, which include paying salaries from club's gross receipts and bberalizing free agent status.

A look at the 14 teams of the American Football Conference follows in the order of their expected

Eastern Division New England Patriots

The Patriots (who had a won-lost record of 10-6 last year) failed to qualify for the playoffs in three of the past four seasons on account of late-season defeats. Steve Grogan, the quarterback, says: "Some-times I think those witches they burned in Salem put a curse on this franchise.

Grogan, although crippled by December and replaced by Matt Cavanaugh, had a splendid season and he expects another one. Vagas Ferguson, an impressive rookie a year ago, and the underestimated Don Calhoun will be the running bicks, with Harold Jackson and Stanley Morgan the receivers. No other team can boast a pair whose average gains exceeded 20 yards a sons for deserved promotion. The conference's strongest defensive backfield returns and two rookies, Don Blackmon and Steve Clark, provide needed help up front. Blackmon is a likely starter at linebacker. This team is of Super Bowl quality.

Buffalo Bills

The Bills (11-5) last year had their best season since joining the NFL in 1970, and much credit went to Joe Cribbs, the rookie run-ning back who gained LI85 yards and caught 52 passes. The defen-sive unit gave up only 16.3 points a game, third best in the league, and the lineup will be duplicated. The 1980 offense is also complete.

Conrad Dobler and Reggie McKenzie, 10-year guards, anchor the offensive line while Jerry Butler is the key receiver. The draft produced little help because the first choice, Booker Moore, is outfor the year due to illness. He was to contest with Curtis Brown at fullback.

New York Jets

No one can guess what the Jets (4-12) might do. Reasons to anticipate improvement include the new assistant coach, Joe Walton, who gives the offense needed direction. Richard Todd, whose 30 intercepted passes led the league, will benefit from a more cohesive attack, one likely to be without Wesley Walker, the premier receiver, early in the season.

When half a dozen running backs are sorted out, Freeman McNeil, the top draft choice, should start at hairback with Clark Gaines at fullback. The seasoned offensive line will be a good one provided Jerome Barkum holds up

Miami Dolphins

The Dolphins (8-8) accomplished the difficult transition of quarterbacks from the older one, Bob Griese, to the new prince, David Woodley, to the astonishment of all including Don Shula, the coach. No one expected Woodley, an eighth-round draft choice, to do

There are skeptics who want to see Woodley do it again over a 16-game season without help from the retired Griese, who is now his coach. In addition to Griese, other veterans from the Super Bowl teams of the 1970s who retired were Larry Little, Bob Matheson and Tim Foley. Bob Kuchenberg, 33, continues to start at guard in his 12th pro season on an offensive line needy of more talent, notably at tight end.

Baltimore Colts

The Baltimore Colts (7-9), who have won only 17 games the past three seasons, had a good draft, and at least five rookies can be im-

Domell Thompson, the first choice, will start at defensive end and Bubba Green, the sixth selection, possibly at tackle on a four-man line. The fullback and tightend positions on offense can go to Randy McMillan from Pitt and Tim Sherwin from Boston College. Obed Arini from Clemson is to be the new kicker. In addition, David Shula, the former Dartmouth re-ceiver and son of the Mismi coach, may survive the final cut.

Central Division Pittsburgh Steelers

The Steelers (9-7) missed playoff qualification for the first time in nine years but expect to be a formidible force even if Terry Bradshaw loses his interest on his

went for touchdowns. Jerry Sherk, the defensive tackle. has made another comeback, with his surgical knees sound again. He should help Lyle Alzado apply necessary pass rush so the line-backers and backs are not overwhelmed. The Browns ranked last in pass defense statistics.

Cincinnati Bengals

Forrest Gregg's first season as coach of the Bengals (6-10) proved satisfactory after the team won three of its last four games. "We need more offense," says Gregg, but his team will be much the Cris Collinsworth, the second draft choice, has beaten out David Verser, the first, and will start at wide receiver. Issac Curtis, when the gets over a muscle pull, will be the other one. Ken Anderson is again at quarterback, with Charles Alexander and Pete Johnson the

The 3-4 defense, which has three first round draft picks in the line, led by Ross Browner, could not stop the potent offenses; there are no evident improvements.

Houston Oilers

The best laid plans went awry for the Oilers (1!-5) and their new coach, Ed Biles, who had been pro-moted after the owner, Bud Adams, dissisten was to be the Gifford Nielsen was to be the quarterback directing a more di-versified attack but Nielsen damaged a shoulder and will be out unril October.

So Ken Stabler, who announced he was rething the day training camp opened, has been brought back and is to start the season. He is 35, immobile because of wobbly knees, and 28 of his passes were intercepted last season. The alternative is John Reaves, who has not played in two years.

Earl Campbell, who has gained
5,081 yards in three seasons, is now a halfback with Rob Carpenter the fullback in a pro set rather than an I-formation offense.

NFL Exhibition

The second secon

ing two Pro Bowl players in Rob-ert Brazile, the linebacker, and Greg Stemnick, the cornerback, is unchanged.

Western Division San Diego Chargers

Late last season, the Chargers (I1-5) played the Washigton Redskins, a team going nowhere, and lost, 40-17. In spite of three pass rushers slated to start in the Pro Bowl, Fred Dean, Gary Johnson and Louie Kelcher, the Charger defense had become "sterile," as Kelcher said. The Redskins, and later Oakland in the playoffs, completed short passes to the backs, thus beating the pass rush which led the NFL with 60 cacks.

There is nothing wrong with the offense. Chuck Muncie, the halfback, has looked so good that the team will run the ball more often. John Jefferson, the premier receiver, remains absent while seeking a contract renegotiation, but Dan Fours still has plenty of catchers: Kellen Winslow, Charlie Joiner, Dwight Scales and Billy Brooks. Fours last year passed for 4,715 yards, or 25 times as many yards as the runners gained.

Oakland Reiders

The Raiders (11-5) will open the season against Denver, fielding a lineup similar to the one that ended the last campaign so successfully with the easy victory over Philadelphia in the Super Bowl. There have been no retirements, one injury and just a few changes among second-line players as the coach, Tom Flores, makes room for rookics like Curt Marsh and Ted Watts, first-round draft choices.

Marsh is to back up 36-year-old Gene Upshaw, who is starting his 15th season at guard, and Watts will learn his trade behind Lester Hayes, the all-pro cornerback. If the mature offensive line, sloppy at times in protecting Jim Plunkett during preseason, needs help Marsh could soon become a start-

Kansas City Chiefs

The Chiefs (8-5) lost their quarterback, Steve Fuller, for at least a month when be underwent minor knee surgery recently. Bill Kenney, who did well in replacing Fuller for two games last year, takes over and the team has confidence in

A late quarterback change can be traumatic, but the Chiefs were to rely so much on their tough, young defense that the switch is tolerated. But if one of the defensive ends, Art Still or Mike Bell, had been damaged then the sea-son's start would be dreaded.

After a steady rise in the standings the Seahawks (4-12) had one of those shartering seasons that can destroy a team's confidence and cost the coach his job. Fol-lowng a commendable 9-7 record the year before, Seattle lost 12, and all eight at home. But management stuck with Jack Patera, the only head coach of the five-year-old Seahawks. Patera can only guess what kind of a team he will field because performances have been so erratic

The offensive line failed to protect its quarterback, Jim Zorn, who was sacked 44 times. The best back, Sherm Smith, missed 13 games. He has returned and will pair with Dan Doornink while Zorn, the clever lefthanded scrambler, again has his favorite receiver, Steve Largent, who always gets open. But the line remains ques-tionable as does the entire defense.

Denver Broncos

What's new with the Broncos (8-8)? The owner, the coach and the general manager are new but not many of the players. Edgar F. Kai-ser Jr., who paid $30 million for the team, is the new owner; Dan Reeves the coach and Grady Alderman the general manager. But Craig Morton, 38, will be the quarterback unless Reeves decides to gamble with the untried Jeff

The Biltmore Dream

W went and tore down the Bilimore Hotel lobby in New York the other day - clock and all. For you young whippersuppers, the Biltmore was the most preppie place in the whole wide world, and this was when it REALLY counted to be a prepoie.

l wasn't a preppie in those days but I used to sit in the lobby of the Biltmore and pretend I was. which was the next best thing. What happened was that - 1M all those gor-geous young Bar-Buchwald hie dolls used to come in from Smith and Vassar, and Mount Holyoke and heaven knows where and meet their dates under the clock. The coeds wore fuzzy angora sweaters, and tartan skirts and silk stockings and high heels and pearls around their necks. A guy could just die in the lobby of the Biltmore staring at them and dreaming a Barbie doll's

It never happened, but I was prepared if it did. Every weekend l took a seat in the lobby waiting for a dumb jock from Harvard. Princeton, Yale or West Point to date would not show up, and that she would break into tears right

there under the clock.

Fram there is would be just a matter of time before we told each other our life's stories. She would reveal her father was the chairman of the New York Central Railroad (don't laugh — it was a big deal in those days), and I would tell ber my family was in textiles (my father made draperies and slipcovers, so I really wasn't making things up).

She would then tell me the boy she was waiting for was really a dunderhead and the only reason she had made a date with him was to get away from school.

"I would tell her I was just killing time in the lobby of the Bilt-mure until I got my acceptance papers from the Royal Canadian Air Force. I would explain that al-though the U.S. hadn't gotten intn the war vet, it would just be a mat-ter of time, and then America would need every trained fighter pilot it could get.

Ohviously, in my fantasy when she heard I was about to go off to a war, all reason would leave her and we would both remember the Bitmore Hniel (Room 345) for the rest of our lives.

As I said before nothing like this ever happened, but the fantasy did manage to get me through some hat days and cold nights in the years that followed.

So, when I read about the Biltmore Hotel elock being torn down and destroyed, it really teed me nff - not just because they wrecked my teen age dreams, but I always hoped to get back to the Biltmore lobby when I started collecting So-cial Security and my my luck

Kathleen Tynan Widow of an Angry 10 ung man Data for a Look Back in Fondness

Widow of an Angry Young Man Seeks

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss tsonal Herald Tribu

PARIS — Kathleen Tynan, the widow of the English drama critic Kenneth Tynan, who died last summer in California, is preparing to write the life of her late hus-

Mrs. Tynan lives in New York City now. hut she is visiting France and England to col-lect material for the biography and to talk with those who knew Tynan.

A beautiful woman with long chestnut locks and smiling eyes, she is often mistaken for an actress. Although she has the poise that suggests histrionic training, she has never been on stage or screen. She is a furmer film critic of The Observer, the London weekly; her articles have appeared in literary and fashion magazines, and her script for the film "Agatha" has been published in book

'Fatal Miscasting'

"I thought Vanessa Redgrave, precisely nn the mark as the young Agatha Christie, but there was fatal miscasting otherwise," she said more in sorrow than in anger. "They realized the atmosphere of the out-of-season English spa with the details I described, but somehow the treatment was not what I

"About the Ken book. Ken kept postponing the writing of his autobiography. What the intended was not only his own story—though he would have included it—but a portrait of the angry younger intellectuals of postwar England, the boys and girls who came into the limelight in the '50s and '60s. They had been children during the war and wanted drastie change in social system when peace came. They protested in novels, plays, films and in journalism. They made a stir and several of them are now established artists. Yet, it's retro now, a sort of looking back at anger. However, what they did brought about many revisions. It certainly changed the theater.

"We moved to California five years ago. Ken was suffering from emphysema and we thought the mild climate would improve him. He was warned nnt to smnke and he did stop for awhile, but he found it impossible to write without puffing on a cigarette. He knew the risk, but he took it. He had commitments to write profiles for The New Yorker and he concentrated on that and then was so tired he had no more energy for other writing. He was to write a book on Laurence Olivier, too, about their collaboration in estab-lishing the National Theatre and the management of it during its early years. Olivier ob-jected to such a book — he is writing his memoirs — and that project was dropped. "I first met Ken in 1963 when we were both on The Observer," she recalled. "We were married three years later. Ken gave up journalistie criticism 10 become adviser on plays at the National Theatre. He was often in the news after he was a newspaperman. He launehed an attack on Truman Capote's book, 'In Cold Blood' and Capote rose in its defense. That was a press scandal. "Then during a television talk show he remarked as part of his campaign against cen-sorship that no civilized person would today object to the use of the word 'fuck.' That was another scandal and its most amusing reper-cussion was a letter from a Scottish general who wrote that it was a word he almost never used and certainly not in the presence of women. Then came the all-naked revue, 'Oh! Calcutta!' first in New York, then in London, then in Paris and other capitals. It was branded 'nbscene', but it's accepted now."

Seeking Facts Not Opinions

The critic's widow, well aware that her late bush and deliberately created as much hostility as he did admiration, is not so eager to have opinions about him --- pro or con -- as she is to discover facts about his life before she knew him.

For example, he came to Paris with an English troupe to play in Maxwell Anderson's play about the Sacco-Vanzetti case. That was in 1948. What happened? What happened was that the fog effect for the dockside scenes engulfed the audience and made the stenes engulfed. made the stage action invisible. This did not discourage Tynan's theatrical ambitions. He went back to London and joined up as an actor, making his professional debut as the Player King in "Hamlet."

Beverley Baxter, critic of the Evening Standard, panned his performance and Tynan wrote the editor in a light vein, saying that he wasn't as bad as Baxter contended; at least he hadn'ı fallen off the stage. The paper's owner, Lord Beaverbrook, fnund the letter witty, assigned Baxter to other duties and made Tynan drama critic.

Tynan was born in Birmingham in 1927. I ynan was born in Birmingham in 1927. His mother was never married to his father, a Midlands chain-store tycoon. Like the man in the song, the father knew Lloyd George and Lloyd George knew him and aided him with his influence. Yet on the father's death the son inherited little and was admitted to Oxford on a scholership. Oxford on a scholarship.

He cut memorable capers in his university days, startling conservative professors and students with his audacious clothes and twirling walking stick and becoming the ringlead-er of hudding nonconformists. This position of leader of the opposition was one he relished and sought to maintain all his life, causing one person who found some of his postgraduate attitudes sophomoric to duh him: "Rip Van With It."

The Cocteau Pattern

His unqualified enthusiasm for Jean Cocteau puzzles his widow. It lies in the dazzling dexterity Cocteau exercised in varying forms - in the novel, in the theater and ballet, as a provocative commentator nnt only on the arts but on such new arts as jazz and the cinema. Tynan, although the novel did not tempt him, sought to emulate this pattern: as literary adviser and play-doctor at the Na-tional, as a crine of both the theater and films, and as scenarist on screenplays, among them the shooting script for Roman Polanski's "Macbeth."

When first engaged as critic he was apoliti-cal, an art-for-art's-sake rebel, and his conversion to leftist causes came after his reputation was secure, probably with the belated discovery of Brecht and his theories. Perhaps it was the fashion of the period, but he stuck to his opinions. When serving as critic for The New Yorker he went to Cuba and interviewed Castro. As a result he was questioned by a Senate subcommittee, an experience he recounted with elan in an article that ran under the title "Have You Booked Any Good

Reds Lately?"

Kathleen Tynan, in addition to working on her husband's biography, hopes to film a script she has just completed.

"It's called 'One Way' and it's about members of the radical chie set who get a vicarious thrill in visiting countries where Marxism is supposedly in practice," she said. "They have money and a round-trip ticket. Theirs is nnt a nne-way journey."
